In scientific writing, it is essential to recognize how others have contributed to your work. Following the principles of a correct quote, writers ensure that readers understand their contribution in the context of existing literature—as they are building, critically examining, or otherwise engaging the work that came before. APA Style provides guidelines to help writers determine the appropriate quote level and how to avoid plagiarism and autoplagiarism. We also provide specific indications for in-text quotes, including formats for interviews, classrooms and intranet sources, and personal communications; quotes in-text in general; and paraphrases and direct quotes. In-text references should immediately follow the title, word or phrase to which they are directly relevant, rather than appear at the end of long clauses or phrases. In-text references should always precede punctuation marks. Below are examples of use of in-text quote. Name of the author in parentheses: A study found that the most important element in understanding non-native speech is familiarity with the topic (Gas & Varonis, 1984). The author's name is part of the narrative: Gass and Varonis (1984) found that the most important element in understanding non-native speech is familiarity with the subject. Group as author: First quote: (American Psychological Association [APA], 2015) Next quote: (APA, 2015) Multiple works: (separate every work with semicolon) The research shows that listening to a particular accent improves the understanding of the speech accented in general (Gass & Varonis, 1984; Kreck Thomas, 2004.) Direct quote: (includ page number and number of quotation on place around direct quote) A study found that "the familiarity of the listener with the theme of speech greatly facilitates the interpretation of the whole message" (Gass & Varonis, 1984, p. 85). Gass and Varonis (1984) noted that "the familiarity of the listener with the theme of the speech greatly facilitates the interpretation of the whole message" (p. 85.) For direct quotes of more than 40 words, view the quote as indented text block without quotes and include authors names, year and page number in parentheses at the end of the quote. For example: This suggests that familiarity with non-active speech in general, although clearly a variable such as the familiarity of the subject is not important, can actually have a certain effect. That is, the previous experience with the nonnative speech, like the one gained by listening to the reading, facilitates understanding. (Gass & Varonis, 1984, p. 77)
